Interfaith Power & Light

honors

Conservation Services Group

with our “Leap of Faith” Award. Starting in January 2001 with a handshake agreement, Conservation Services Group (CSG) and the Interfaith Energy Conservation Group (since renamed Massachusetts Interfaith Power & Light) embarked on a mission to help congregations become energy efficient and to educate them about renewable energy options. CSG had no guarantee that this relationship would be financially viable, but they forged ahead based on the belief that the community of faith should – and would – become a leader in the movement for “energy stewardship.” Together, CSG and Massachusetts Interfaith Power & Light have worked in the underbellies of religious facilities, learning through trial and error how best to serve the community of faith. Thank you, CSG, for believing in the possibilities of MIP&L, and for understanding the importance of the community of faith as leaders in the movement for energy stewardship.
